Snake Office

The Snake office was created in 1903 in the Kobe district. The Snake Office comes from a long line of offices, each giving a new name to the Post office. The Snake Office specialises in transport and transit of packages. Giving the fastest and easier way around all japan.

The Snake Office has given many into charities like a chance for all , scholarships and cultural events. The Snake Office has participated close to the government to help and expose underground organisations who have tried to use the Snake Office services to do evil.

In 1960 , the new Snake officer master of the house was Yoko Tsuyoshi , engaging in the tradition of taking the name Snake , he took on his lead of the office. During the 70's , the Snake office knew it's epoxy with international orders asking the Snake Office services.

The Snake Office gets written as an international post office who welcomes services asked all around the world and keeps a clean public image. The Snake Office, just like any other offices, knows of many controversies from rival offices.

In 2010 , Snake , Yoko Tsuyoshi died in a car accident in Susukino. Highly mourned , the office keeps an enormous amount of support during the remolding of the office. The next Snake is his right hand man Kenshin Ao who was like family to him , as the offices are big families.

Kenshin Ao takes back the Snake Office heritage and put his own ideas into the office.
